I saw one submission that caught my attention, and I thought to myself - "That seems like a good idea to add". I opened the URL and submitted the link to my Digg account. I remember clearly that I had done this sometime last year and had not noticed any feedback from any of my friends. So today I'm looking back over my News.me feed, and I see that it only took me to submit a story to Digg about a month ago, but the first comments were posted on the same story, just a few minutes ago. The first feedback I had on the submission from my own story was from an hour ago. So I have no idea if it was actually the first time I submitted a story to Digg, but I'm curious if it was the first time I actually got feedback from the community on a story I submitted. Anyone remember this story from my News.me feed, and if so, was it you that posted the first feedback on my submission? ===== JacobAldridge I remember this story - I commented at the time - and yes, it was the first one on my feed. You were certainly the first I remember seeing though. ----- revoard No, you were not. There's probably a large number of interesting posts on Digg that are sitting around. --- I'm pretty sure I remember this one as being an interesting story that wasn't being shared by most of my friends - and at the time I had a short - 5 week old, update every 10 minutes - News.me account which I used as a list of interesting links. Let's suppose that "interesting" is a 50/50 split between "right" and "wrong", and that that split is unknown to 82157476af
