Thyroid function in a patient with thrombotic thrombocytopenic purpura and asymptomatic thrombocytopenia. Thyroid function was determined in a patient with thrombotic thrombocytopenic purpura (TTP) and asymptomatic thrombocytopenia. Initially, the patient had overt TTP, but her condition deteriorated as episodes of confusion and disorientation developed and the patient became clinically anemic. On occasion her platelet count would decrease to below 30,000/mm³. During the period of these clinical changes, her thyroid function tests were normal. Finally her platelet count increased and her clinical condition stabilized. However, her thyroid function tests were abnormal for several months thereafter. In her last follow-up examination her free T3 and free T4 levels were in the low normal range and her thyrotropin (TSH) level was in the high normal range. The determination of thyroid function in a patient with suspected TTP has not heretofore been reported. The case presented here illustrates the importance of thyroid function tests in evaluating patients with TTP. Cooperatives shouldn't be subject to the same rules as non-cooperative businesses, or so one thinks. But a recent case before the Supreme Court may change that assumption. This week, Justice Clarence Thomas wrote the majority opinion for Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit in a case, Best Products Company v. In doing so, it struck down as unconstitutional an earlier version of the law that had exempted cooperatives from the special taxes. The law had been enacted during the Great Depression as a way to subsidize the farmers who had cooperated with the Federal Government to keep the nation's food supply on an even keel during a time of great need. In the decades that followed, cooperatives survived as a vital part of American 82157476af
